Tuberculosis of the lungs holds first rank as the deadliest malady affecting the population of this country. Next to it stands pneumonia, and third on the list is heart disease.

The death rate of the United States and, in fact, of the civilized world, is showing a tendency to decrease, Report Issued.

The Bureau of the Census has just published its seventh annual report on mortality statistics, which presents the figures for the calendar year 1906, to-gether with comparative data for the years 1902 to 1905, inclusive.

The statistics in the report do not cover the entire country, but are restricted to that portion of it termed the "registration area;" that is, to States dn which the laws requiring the regis-tration of deaths have been accepted as giving practically complete mortality returns, and to those cities in nonregistration districts in which satisfactory returns are required by the local authori-

The death rate from suicide showed a marked decrease in 1906, while from 1902 to 1905 there was a large increase each year. The number of suicides in 1906, 685,105, and the death rate was 16.1 per according to the report, was 5,663, of 1,000 of population. The corresponding which 4,521 were males and 1,332 ferrate for 1965 was 16.2 and the annual males. The largest number of male suicides for any five-year-age period were between the ages of thirty-five and thirty-nine, and the largest number of female suicides were between the ages twenty-five and twenty-nine, Fifteen States.

The registration area in 1906 consisted lif fifteen registration States, the District of Columbia and seventy-seven registration cities in nonregistration States. The States were California, Colorado, Connecticut, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Vermont. The estimated population of the entire registration area in 1906 was 40,996,317, or 48.8 per cent of the estimated population of continental United States. Of this number 32,996,782 persons, or 39.3 per cent of the total population, were in registration States, and 7,999,535 persons, or 95 per cent were in registration of the continent of t 9.5 per cent, were in registration cities in nonregistration States.

in nonregistration States.
Pulmonary tuberculosis was the cause of 65,341 deaths in the registration area for 1906, and the death rate per 100,000 of population was 169.4, as compared with a rate of 168.2 for 1905. A part of the decrease was due to the inclusion of new States with a low mortality rate, but there was also a genuine decrease in the rate in the o'd registration area.

other States sojourning in these States in search of health.

None of the registration States is in the South, and none except Indiana, South Dakota, and a part of Colorado, is in the great Mississippi basin. The extensive non-registration sections are represented by only a few scattered cities. The figures, however, are more representative than those presented in the annual reports that have preceded it.

Minnesota and Wisconsin have recent-y passed laws for the registration of eaths, which, if effectively enforced, vill entitle those States to be included at the registration area. The Bureau of the Census is making earnest efforts to increase the number of registration larges.

Total Deaths 685,105.

The total number of deaths reported for the registration area for 1906 was rate for 1900 was 16.2 and the annual average rate from 1901 to 1905 was 16.3. The annual average rate for England and Wales during the same period was 16; for Ireland, 17.6; for Germany, 19.9; and France, 19.6. Referring to these and France, 19.6. Referring to these figures the report says:

"The comparison of the death rates of this and other countries at the present time with death rates of the same countries for the last century shows upon what an era of low mortality the world has arrived. Many of the former death rates were upward of 25 per 1,000 of population. The tendency in larger countries with a population of similar character to that of the United States now seems toward an annual death rate of omparison over a period of years.

For the whole registration area the mortality rate from typhoid fever was 321, as compared with the rate for a smaller area in 1905 of 281. Practically all of the increase was due to the inclusion of new areas with high mortality rates.

The States with the lowest mortality rates were South Dakota, 83.9, and Michigan 90.1. Those with the highest rates were Colorado, 252.9, and California, 231.5.

The high rates in the two latter States, the report says, must not be construed as indicating the prevalence of tuberculosis among the native population, as these States have many climatic advantages for consumptives, and it is probable that a large number of the deaths are to be counted to legal residents of
